

Statement of participation

Amanda George

has completed the free course including any mandatory tests for:

Children and young people's participation

This 12-hour free course explored how to enable children and young people to participate in decision making, and the need for an integrated approach.

Issue date: 24 April 2018

www.open.edu/openlearn

This statement does not imply the award of credit points nor the conferment of a University Qualification. This statement confirms that this free course and all mandatory tests were passed by the learner. Please go to the course on OpenLearn for full details:
<http://www.open.edu/openlearn/health-sports-psychology/childhood-youth/children-and-young-peoples-participation/content-section-0>

COURSE CODE: E807_1

Children and young people's participation

<http://www.open.edu/openlearn/health-sports-psychology/childhood-youth/children-and-young-peoples-participation/content-section-0>

Course summary

Listening to children is a first step in the participation agenda, which is reasonably well established. By contrast, enabling children to share in decision making lags some way behind. This free course, Children and young people's participation, emphasises that the adoption of an integrated approach to participation by different sectors of the children's workforce is of crucial importance.

Learning outcomes

By completing this course, the learner should be able to:

- define the complexity of participation for children and young people
- compare and contrast different cultural perspectives and experiences of participation
- reflect critically on personal professional practice and assumptions regarding participation.

Completed study

The learner has completed the following:

Section 1

Children and young people's participation

Section 2

Personal practice

Section 3

Conclusion