

Statement of participation

Amanda George

has completed the free course including any mandatory tests for:

Childhood in crisis?

This 6-hour free course explored the concept of childhood, and the ways in which the notion of crisis may shape how children in the West are seen.

Issue date: 20 April 2018

www.open.edu/openlearn

This statement does not imply the award of credit points nor the conferment of a University Qualification.
This statement confirms that this free course and all mandatory tests were passed by the learner.
Please go to the course on OpenLearn for full details:
<http://www.open.edu/openlearn/health-sports-psychology/childhood-youth/childhood-crisis/content-section-0>

COURSE CODE: E212_1

Childhood in crisis?

<http://www.open.edu/openlearn/health-sports-psychology/childhood-youth/childhood-crisis/content-section-0>

Course summary

This free course, Childhood in crisis?, explores an idea much repeated in minority-world media that childhood is in crisis. Looking at this idea is a starting point for the study of childhood. You will consider the concept of childhood and the ways in which the notion of crisis may shape how children in the West are seen. By completing the activities, you will be introduced to different ways of understanding this idea and also asked to consider your own feelings in relation to it.

Learning outcomes

By completing this course, the learner should be able to:

- explore the concept of childhood and some of the ways minority-world childhood is characterised as 'in crisis'
- develop ideas on how childhood may be constructed
- develop an awareness of the ways in which the notion of crisis may have practical consequences for children's lives, identities and experiences.

Completed study

The learner has completed the following:

Section 1

Whose childhood is in crisis?

Section 2

Childhood then and now

Section 3

Conclusion